Miguel Azguime lecture in Aveiro at EAW 2017 at 16h00

“Two New Op-Era examples and their technological creation network”

In the last 10 years I have created several stage works involving a network of technological means as well as a network of artistic disciplines. I call this type of work a New Op-Era, indeed born from the current electronic culture and being the expression of hybrid intertextuality.

I'll take as examples my works “Salt Itinerary” (2006) and “A Laugh to Cry” (2013) where we'll find within the creative process a network of multiple “inputs” and “outputs”, and where representation and operability are integrated in a new kind of creative transversality of textuality.
